Áine is a performance artist and head of the sculpture program at the Burren College of Art in County Clare, Ireland. Through her performance, film and video she explores issues of autobiography, social activism and artist-led initiatives. She has recently released a book entitled “Performance Art in Ireland: A History.” She sums up her practice, saying:

“Art has the potential to influence and enable positive change to happen in the world and as artists we can aim to generate a better world through an engaged art practice that produces the culture around us.”
