As an artist or designer, you have made a commitment to choosing a career path in a creative field. We believe participating in competitive opportunities is integral to the development of a robust studio practice. Applying to any competitive opportunity requires a great deal of effort, from preparing materials to creating a statement of intent. The students and alumni we have worked with through the years have told us the application process itself was a beneficial learning opportunity that helped them attain significant skills that remained useful throughout their careers.

We hope this booklet answers some of the questions you may have on where to begin your search for these opportunities. Good luck with your search, and remember we are always here to answer any questions you may have.

Apprenticeship Programs Opportunities to gain insight and professional advice by working with an established career artist

Calls for Entry Museums, commercial galleries, alternative spaces, and periodicals offer opportunities for artists to submit artwork for exhibitions or publications through a juried process

Contests Monetary awards or exposure and recognition in exhibition venues such as magazines, art fairs, or film festivals

Crowdsourced Funding An approach to fundraising that enables many individuals to collectively fund a specific project or small business

Artist-in-Residence/Residencies Offer space and time for artists to apply singular focus to the creation of new work

Equipment Access Awards Competitive programs that award winners with access to special equipment, such as printmaking studio keyholder programs

Fiscal Sponsorship Refers to the practice of non-profit organizations offering their legal and tax-exempt status to groups engaged in activities related to the organization’s missions; typically involves a fee-based contractual arrangement between a project and an established non-profit.

In-Kind Gifts Donations of materials, merchandise, equipment, or labor

Matching/Challenge Gifts Donors match a particular amount of money raised from other sources.

Request for Qualifications (RFQ) Often cities or commissions advertise RFQ’s for artists interested in being considered as candidates for public art projects or public art registries

Request for Proposals (RFP) This term is often seen for opportunities to submit proposals for murals or public art projects

Space Awards Competitive programs that grant studio space at no or minimal cost

Letter of Inquiry/Letter of Interest (LOI) A short letter that summarizes a non-profit’s or individual’s proposal sent to a potential funder or sponsor

As a professional artist, not only do you need great work, but part of creating a successful career means treating your practice seriously. In order to be ready for success, make sure to have high quality images of your work, and all the pertinent information (year created, dimensions, title and medium) for each piece in one place. This information should be organized and labeled in a way that it is easily accessible when needed. If you would like to document your work yourself, review these tutorials: Photographing 2D Works, Photographing 3D Works. For performance based installation work or pieces made from materials that are hard to document, it may be worth it to hire a photographer.

Some artists use a content management system to keep themselves organized like GYST. You should have multiple sized files for each image already prepared in order to have images small enough to upload into Submittable or SlideRoom. If you do time based work, make sure to have a demo reel prepared or works uploaded to Vimeo.

You will also need your artist’s statement, bio, an updated artist resume or CV, and a list with contact information of potential references.

As a professional artist, you absolutely need to have a website. If you do not have one yet, you can create a portfolio on MICA Portfolios. Your site should be listed on your artist resume so curators, critics, etc. who like your work can continue to follow you.

In order to be competitive when applying to grants or residencies, you will need to have a history of exhibitions on your resume. To begin exhibiting your work, start at MICA by applying to the undergraduate Student Space Gallery or graduate Grad EX. Once you have exhibited on campus, then try for some juried or group shows in the community; consider putting together DIY exhibitions with your peers.

One of the best ways to find shows is by networking with other artists and attending art openings. Artists are usually not given solo shows until they have had several group exhibitions. Following others on social media is another great way to network and stay connected with other artists and your local artist community.

LEFT: Wickerham & Lomax is the collaborative name of Baltimore-based artists Malcolm Lomax ’09 (Painting BFA) and Daniel Wickerham ’14 (Painting BFA). Recent exhibitions by Wickerham & Lomax include Girth Proof at Dem Passwords, Los Angeles; the premiere of Encore in the AFTALYFE at the Artists Space booth, Frieze NY 2014; and BOY'Dega: Edited4Syndication for New Museum’s First Look series. In most cases, grant applications will require a narrative component—a statement of purpose or intent that describes the project, defines goals, and establishes a timeline. This part of the application is where you must offer detail on how you will achieve your goals and what types of support you will need. Please note that requirements vary widely from opportunity to opportunity. If your project is focused on working with a specific community group, make sure that you are engaging with them to better understand their needs and to create potential partnerships.

Sample checklist:
- What are the goals of your project?
- What are the goals of the funding organization?
- What stage is the project currently in?
- How are you going to accomplish it?
- How long will it take you to complete the project?
- How much funding will you need?
- What types of support do you need?
- Who is your audience?

Prepare Your Proposal:
Again, each proposal will require different elements. Here are some general guidelines to consider when preparing a proposal.

When preparing a proposal:
- Be concise and clear
- Use action verbs
- Create a story that your reviewers can visualize
- Give specific examples
- Create white space and small paragraphs
- ALWAYS have someone proofread your materials!

LEFT: Allison Gulick, ’13 (Curatorial Practice MFA), received the Challenge America Fast-Track grant for $10,000 from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). The Challenge America Fast-Track category from the NEA offers support primarily to small and mid-sized organizations for projects that extend the reach of the arts to underserved populations. Pictured is the title wall for her project, Reloading the Canon: African Traditions in Contemporary Art which took place at the James E. Lewis Museum of Art at Morgan State University in Baltimore, 2013. Photo by Nathaniel Phillips ’13.
TELL A STORY...

Typically grant applications are only one page. Always be sure to follow the directions as to how many words your proposal can be.

Examples:
Art Biz Canada / Kim Bruce sample
Grantspace.org sample

Heading Page:
This lists your name and a title for your proposal. Putting images of your work or relevant imagery for the project can be impactful. When choosing a title, select something direct that potential jurors could immediately understand.

PROPOSAL:
First Paragraph:
This is a very brief statement of your mission, your work or your need, what you want to accomplish, and the name of the grant for which you are applying.

Body Paragraphs:
These paragraphs include further details about your work and the activities you hope to accomplish to achieve your outcomes. Make sure to include details that allow the reader to visualize your plans. Be as specific as you can be, unless the grant specifies otherwise. Some grants are looking to support those that are proposing to conduct open-ended research with undefined outcomes.

Last Paragraph:
Explain how will you know you are successful. What will the impact be on your practice, career, your audience, or the community?
A budget will often be required in your proposal. Make sure that you are considering all of the relevant costs and that your plans are feasible.

Some expenses that can be included in a budget are in-kind donations (a donation of materials, food, space, or non-monetary donations), and personal contributions (money you will need to personally contribute to supplement the required expenditure of your proposal if the grant is less than what you require).

Supporting Materials:
Some opportunities may allow you to submit supporting materials. This could include images of your work, screen shots of airfare estimates, letters from contributing partners, or even sketches of proposed pieces.

Most organizations will tell you very specifically how they would like you to submit materials so make sure to follow their guidelines EXACTLY. Failure to follow application instructions could get you automatically eliminated.

Consider labeling each page of your grant application with your name so the administrator can keep your materials organized. If they do not offer specific suggestions and you are emailing your materials, make sure to have a clear subject line. Example: “BIG Grant Application Materials.” Label the files you are attaching in a way that is easy for your reviewers to know whom the file belongs to. Example: “SmithG_2016BIGGrant.pdf”. ALWAYS submit your materials on time if not before the deadline, as it is very unprofessional and inappropriate to seek extensions.

On Rejection:
Unfortunately rejection is a routine part of this process, as you will not be awarded everything you apply for. After receiving this information, you can kindly contact the administrator and ask to receive feedback on your materials unless they specify otherwise. This information can often provide valuable tips for future success.

On Acceptance:
Now that you have gotten the grant or opportunity, make sure to write a note to the funders expressing your gratitude! Follow all the defined guidelines for delivering any submittables, receipts, or final reports on time. Document your project so you can share images with the funder and use for your own promotional purposes.

MICA’S WRITING RESOURCES

APPLICATION ASSISTANCE FOR GRANTS & COMPETITIONS
MICA students and alumni have had incredible success with applications for grants and competitions. Career Development’s staff work closely with applicants and have helped MICA students build an amazing track record of success with some of the most prestigious and competitive programs.

WRITING ASSISTANCE
MICA’s Writing Studio is available to all current students who need their materials reviewed. Students may struggle with the basics of writing, which can greatly affect the effectiveness of written proposals and grant applications. If writing is something you would like to improve, Bird on Bird and On Writing Well may be helpful books to review.

WRITING HELP FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS
For undergraduate and graduate international students for whom English is a second language (ESL), ESL Services are offered. Students can seek assistance from the staff at the Writing Studio.

BELOW: Lu Zhang ’04 (General Arts BFA) received a MFA in Painting from the Frank Mohr Institute in the Netherlands. Zhang has exhibited in the U.S. and abroad including shows at C. Grimaldis Gallery in Baltimore, Randall Scott Gallery in Washington DC, and The Center for Art and Culture in France. Zhang has received a grant from the Maryland State Arts Council for works on paper and been awarded The Trawick Prize Young Artist Award. In 2014, she became an inaugural recipient of a Rubys Artist Project Grant in Literary and Visual Arts. Pictured is (topolog) typolog), 2015. Photo by JHU Homewood Photo.
After creating a cohesive and strong body of work and participating in multiple exhibitions, seeking grants and awards is the next step in an active professional artist’s studio practice. Grants and awards are not meant to serve as one’s only income, but can be important for allowing creatives to sustain their practice. This sourcebook offers some general guidelines and a sampling, not an exhaustive list, designed to generate enthusiasm and to provide information on some popular funders and resources.

NOTE: LINKS MAY CHANGE. If you find that a link is not active, type the home or main URL associated with it, then search within the site for the award information.

The Joseph Meyerhoff Center for Career Development has not participated in the development of these sites and is not responsible for the availability or content. Links to sites are provided solely as a convenience to the user and do not constitute any endorsement, authorization, sponsorship, or affiliation by MICA.
Wide arrays of creative opportunities are listed in this sourcebook. Always carefully review eligibility requirements, restrictions, deadlines, and specific guidelines for each opportunity, as it is not uncommon for these to change from year to year, and for grant cycles to vary. Eligibility requirements can include gender, age, geography, ethnicity, career point, and education or training.

Some grants, awards, and residencies will not be easily found online, so often the best way to find potential opportunities is by “mining” the resumes and CVs of artists who you admire.

Most granting organizations have an overall mission statement and/or clearly specified requirements for each grant. Make sure that they are seeking to fund projects like the one you are proposing. Often artists submit proposals that do not fulfill the grantors requirements because the applicant has not carefully reviewed what has been funded in the past. For residencies, make sure that the past participants are at the same point in their careers as you are by reviewing their resumes and websites.

Ask questions: Each funder may designate a process and/or support staff to help guide applicants and answer questions regarding the application process. Make note of these resources and don’t hesitate to call them with your questions.

As you look for opportunities, make sure to keep up an organized list of upcoming deadlines and required materials in one place. Often awards will be due every year at the same time and artists may apply more than once for prestigious awards. Keeping a calendar that lists yearly upcoming deadlines is a great way to always be looking ahead for future success.

For Non-US Citizens
“Most U.S. foundation scholarships (funding) go to U.S. citizens and residents and not to international students or alumni. However, Foundation Grants to Individuals Online our searchable database of grantmakers that give to individuals lists more than 100 funders who give grants to foreign applicants for a variety of purposes. If you use this database, start with a Type of Support search for ‘foreign applicants.’”

As you seek opportunities, be aware of what organizations are sponsoring each grant so you can reach out with any questions and also be informed of any open informational sessions. Non-profits often change the awards they offer from year to year based on their funding, and as a result the newest opportunities may not be posted on their websites. One way to stay informed is to sign up to receive the organization's newsletter, or consider becoming a member.

ARTIST-IN-RESIDENCE PROGRAMS

There are different financial models for residencies. Some charge a fee for you to attend while others are free. Some allow you to do a work exchange to offset costs, and some even provide you a stipend. Typically artists may pay for their first experiences, then as their career progresses they are admitted into more prestigious paid residencies.

Before applying, always be sure to check out the portfolios and artist resumes of artists who have attended previously to see if you would be a good fit for the program.

Writing a Letter of Intent for an artist residency is somewhat similar to writing a grant proposal, but it may ask you to specify why you would like to be at that particular site.

Some of the most prestigious individual artist awards do not take applications—awards are made through a nomination process. While you cannot apply for these awards, applying for and receiving other grants and awards can bring you to the attention of nominating committees, can help build a network of leaders in the art world who know your work, and can raise your visibility to the organizations that administer these awards.

AVOID SCAMS
Some competitions are unethical. Before entering, you might consider how your project will be used and what value the competition offers you. For Design, read the AIGA statement on design competitions and speculative work here. For Fine Arts, information on how to avoid scams check out ArtScams.Com.
DIGITAL, VIDEO, FILM & ANIMATION

Festivals are important for promoting new work. Often selected participants are given lodging, food and travel expenses. Start showing your work in smaller lesser-known festivals, and as your career progresses you can be included in the more prestigious events.

PUBLIC ART & CREATIVE PLACEMAKING

Artists can answer calls for RFP’s (requests for proposals) in order to be considered to create a piece of public art. Many cities have a percent-for-art program meaning that a certain amount of the budget for all new public buildings has to be spent on public art. Be sure to use a program like SketchUp to let the selection panel envision your piece or provide a to-scale model.

In 2014, 22,252 projects were successfully funded on Kickstarter. In 2011, MICA partnered with Kickstarter to create the MICA curated Kickstarter page. Since then, many MICA undergraduates, graduate students, and alumni have successfully raised the funds necessary to complete their projects.

Career Development can meet with you to advise you when curating a Kickstarter project. Check out the guide for How to Kickstart Your Project for additional information.

If you start a Kickstarter campaign to fund a project and would like it to be showcased on the curated MICA page, email the details to careerdevelopment@mica.edu once the campaign is live.
